

Alicia Corcoran
Engl 3204
Medieval Lit
Mosser

An Evaluation of Medieval-life.net

Put together by World Web Design, Medieval-life.net provides a brief overview for anyone interested in medieval times, including that of literature. The URL for this website is www.medieval-life.net. Upon finding this site the first thing that caught my eye and made me stop to look at it was the great art that decorated the page. The page was colorful and looked very professional. Appearance is important in attracting viewers to your site.

The main page provides a short introduction to medieval times and to what the site is going to provide for the viewer. Docked on the left, a long list of table of contents to chose from, including life, history, famines, food, health, literature, chivalry, and romance. Each link had many sub links to chose from, each providing an informative and easy to read summary. In reviewing the literature link, the sub links included monks, troubadours, early works, masterpieces, and printing. Each of these sub links described what the works were, what they were about and who wrote them. As a new student to the study of medieval literature the site helped me become acquainted with the kind of literature I will be studying.

Organization of this website was superb and very easy to use and to access. The large and bold font made it easy to read and the layout was easy to follow and pleasing to the eye. The spelling and grammar seemed to be correct and the summaries were put together well and very informative.

The only oddity while looking over the site were the links to sites that were not related to medieval literature. I tried to find out if the links were some sort of sponsor for the company putting the page together, but I was unable to find out the purpose of the links. There were no addition links from the site that were related to medieval literature.

I recommend this site to anyone interested in becoming slightly educated in medieval literature and medieval times. Sites that are easy to use, easy to understand, and appealing to the eye are the type of sites that I go back to over time and use over and over again. Medieval-life.net is an enjoyable site for any type of audience.